

European cooperation.

Are we a community of fate or an ideological formation?

mgr Justyna Dylak

Agenda

1. Introduction.
2. The beginnings of differentiation of European integration.
3. The European Union in the face of contemporary challenges.
4. Searching for a common path.
5. Conclusions.

Introduction

- Europe is now divided into many directions and opinions.
- Solving emerging problems in Europe today is a huge challenge in many respects.

The beginnings of differentiation of European integration.

- Years of experience in the cooperation of countries in the European Union show many significant and lasting changes in the process of its integration.
- In addition to differentiation resulting from geographical location, the formation of this type of diversity is the result of centuries of evolution of European societies, which are additionally subject to the influence of various internal and international factors.

The European Union in the face of contemporary challenges

1. According to the ideas of Shuman and Monnet, Europe was to be a place of peace, economic prosperity, free and democratic in which values such as solidarity and unity were to be the fundamental foundation for functioning and lasting changes in the process of its integration.
2. The European Union is currently deepening in crisis. Not to mention the fact that anti-European politicians have more and more strength and the pro-European elite is becoming less and less. All these factors will contribute to paralysis in Europe, which will not do anything good for member countries. Emerging moods of the unpopular and inefficient Union are not the right way to counter disintegration.
3. Integration is the key to the success of a common Europe, ensuring economic growth and peace and solving problems.

Searching for a common path

- secure;
- competitive;
- fair;
- balanced
- influential in the world.

Conclusion

1. Building a common Europe should be preceded by a discussion on a new way of integration.
2. Despite the fact that each country joins the Union with its own culture and separate history, we still remain a community of fate.
3. An action plan should be identified for the coming years. Creating a new action plan, not just responding to problems that constantly surprise the Union.

Thank you for your attention